TAGLINE

Her only hope is to enter the nightmare.

LOGLINE

A desperate mother uses a secret technology to enter her catatonic daughter's mind to save her, but in the depths of the girl's consciousness, she encounters the dark echoes of her own fears.

SYNOPSIS

The dark 1930s. When conventional medicine and religion fail in the face of her daughter's mysterious illness, a desperate mother undertakes a risky break-in at a psychiatric hospital. The true nightmare begins when a mysterious device opens a gateway not only into the shadowed depths of her child's mind, but also into the hell of her own fears.

In this metaphysical realm, guilt takes on a real form, and the fight for her daughter's life becomes a confrontation with the darkest part of herself.

The film is a stylish psychological drama infused with elements of horror, a modern spiritual séance that evokes the ghosts of 1930s cinema to tell a story of sacrifice and facing one's inner demons.

SYNOPSIS (LONG)

The 1930s. When medicine fails and faith offers no hope, a desperate woman must find another way to save her daughter. Her fifteen-year-old daughter, Hania, has been trapped in a mysterious catatonia for months, the cause of which neither doctors nor clergymen can explain. Under the cover of night, the Mother meets with the Scientist, a pariah pushed to the margins of medicine who is seeking redemption in the world of science. He brings a heretical hope in a worn-out suitcase: an experimental machine capable of creating a bridge between minds.

Risking everything, they hide in the dark corridors, avoiding the hospital staff, and break into the psychiatric ward.

Finding Hania in one of the rooms, the Scientist connects the woman and her daughter to the equipment. The Mother's consciousness leaves her body and sinks into the black, barren Void. The space between dimensions and minds. However, she doesn't find her child there. A deformed, grotesque reflection of herself awaits her: the embodiment of the fears and guilt she has buried for years.

The rescue mission turns into a brutal psychodrama. The Mother realizes that to save Hania, she must confront the inner demon she has spent her life feeding with her own fears and guilt. In an act of desperation, she decides to remain in the Void longer than is safe.

The machine malfunctions, and the hospital staff, alerted by the noise, try to force the door open. Inside the Void, Mother performs the ultimate act of self-discovery. When Hania suddenly opens her eyes to the physical world, she sees only her mother's motionless body and the chaos surrounding her.

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

I have always been fascinated by the idea of a Shadow. I do not mean the one that follows us, but rather the one hidden deep within us. Jung's concept of the dark, repressed side of the human psyche struck me as a perfect foundation for a drama infused with metaphysical elements.

I believe that the atmosphere of classic horror cinema, specifically how it plays with light and darkness, provides the ideal language to tell this archetypal story. "Shadows" was born from this desire to create a universal psychological drama dressed in the costume of a 1930s movie.

At the heart of this story is the Mother and her ultimate question about the limits of sacrifice. What happens when love forces us to enter hell? Not the metaphysical one, but the hell of our own psyche where every step leads deeper into the hidden guilt. Her journey into the extrasensory void is not only a struggle to save her daughter, but above all a desperate attempt to confront her own guilt and accept the darkest parts of herself.

I was captivated by the tension between two perspectives, involving scientific precision and metaphysical mystery. Each offers a different explanation for the protagonist's suffering, yet neither can truly bring her peace. The real answer lies beyond them both, in an act of pure and unconditional love.

I chose a black and white aesthetic because this story could not fully exist in color. It is a tale that unfolds in a liminal space, on the border between wakefulness and nightmare. The visual austerity and a minimalist approach are intended to focus the viewer's full attention on the character's emotional journey, creating a timeless story about how sometimes the hardest battle we fight is with ourselves.

"Shadows" is essentially a psychological drama dressed in a costume woven from mystery and a touch of horror. It tells the story of how the most difficult battles are not fought against monsters outside, but against the ones we nurture within ourselves. This is my dialogue with darkness, and I hope it will resonate with audiences as well.

"Shadows" was created as a short film as part of the 6th edition of the directing course organised by Speakers' Avenue.

BACKGROUND

The desire to make my own film had been maturing in my mind for many years. For a long time, the biggest obstacle was finding people in my immediate environment willing to share this challenge.

Despite this, I did not give up and consistently acquired knowledge on my own. I analyzed cinema and learned the fundamentals of the craft wherever I could, ranging from cinematography and screenwriting to directing.

The breakthrough came when the opportunity arose to join a directing course. It was a pivotal decision. It gave me access to professionals and introduced me to wonderful and passionate people with whom I could finally realize my vision.

PRE-PRODUCTION

Making the film presented a tremendous challenge from the very beginning since I started with resources allowing for only a single day of work for the cinematographer and gaffer. Despite these limitations, I successfully secured funding and doubled the number of shooting days. I also gathered nearly forty wonderful industry professionals ready to bring my vision to life.

A pivotal moment was the casting process where I found the ideal actors for the lead roles. The unique chemistry between them was palpable from the very first moments.

During numerous meetings with various departments, we developed a coherent vision of the world portrayed within the film. We realized that the shooting schedule would be very tight. Therefore, we prepared a detailed storyboard for all scenes and precisely planned every hour of work.

SHOOT AND LOCATIONS

We found the ideal location, which was an authentic psychiatric hospital. We adapted an unused wing and constructed a set design that reflected historical realities.

Thanks to detailed pre-production and an incredibly efficient crew, we managed to shoot all the material needed to depict the tangible reality. This involved dozens of shots captured across several interior locations and the hospital exterior.

The second shooting day took place in a studio. It was there, against black and white backgrounds, that we filmed dozens more shots depicting events in the Void, a dark world from beyond our dimension. Many of these were trick shots requiring precise planning and immediate problem-solving on set.

POST-PRODUCTION

Although we did everything in our power to create the Shadow character using practical effects on set, the final result did not satisfy us. Budget limitations prompted me to learn digital special effects on my own. Ultimately, the Shadow character was created in Unreal Engine 5. This process was facilitated by my previous experience with similar software. In total, nearly thirty VFX shots were created.

The work involved removing modern infrastructure from outdoor scenes and studio elements as well as adding effects such as sparks and additional lighting. Editing and the final touches, including sound design and color grading, were completed in professional studios: Studio FONOGRAF and COLOR PRO.

ADAM PALUCH

Director, Writer and Producer

A debuting director, screenwriter, and producer.

He previously created digital worlds in the video game industry and now works daily as a UX designer, shaping user experiences. Ultimately, he turned his focus toward his greatest passion: cinema.

His work is a dialogue with darkness, where psychological drama meets metaphysical fear. In film, he is drawn to what lies beneath the surface of the story – the mystical structures that govern human fate. His debut film, “Shadows”, is both a love letter to early cinema and a dark treatise on the shadow that follows us and the one that dwells within us.

GRZEGORZ ADAMCZYK

Executive Producer

A debuting film producer, an experienced entrepreneur, and the founder and CEO of an IT company.

He recognized the artistic potential of the “Shadows” project, which he decided to provide strategic support for. As a co-producer, he facilitated the film’s production, becoming its key patron and partner.

His entry into the world of film is a natural extension of his passion for visual arts and new media, and the first step towards supporting bold, auteur cinema.
